Shophouse

A shophouse is a vernacular architectural building type that is commonly seen in areas such as urban Southeast Asia.

Typically, shophouses consist of shops on the ground floor which open up to a public arcade or "five-foot way", and which have residential accommodation upstairs. Shophouses, like row houses in England and townhouses in the U.S., abut each other to form rows with regular facade, with fire walls between them and adherence to street alignment.
